For, a genuine utopia would be a world in which we not only find our rights and the rights of others respected, but also find ourselves living well both individually and collectively. That is to say, it would be a world in which the quality and satisfaction of our social interactions was high, in which we as individuals and society as a whole ...

In book 2, Raphael describes utopia, which saved his life after he, a former explorer with Amerigo Vespucci, had been hopelessly blown off course and lost. The purpose and achievement of utopia is the satisfaction, for all its citizens, of genuine human pleasures. The pleasures are to be genuine, for example a pleasure
